

Risk gets a bad rap.

If you are a person who is seen as too risky, that is a negative.

If you are seen as risk averse, you miss out.

These two opposites have huge implications for leading teams.

In this issue we explore risk and help you see it as a tool for leading rather than a badge of honour or something to shy away from.

Count on us to always push you to be a better leader.

Yours in team performance,

Bill & Esther.

---

Tools for Change

Your Purpose as a Leader

This four page worksheet will help you to understand why you are leading and what drives you personally in your leadership will make you more effective.

How we help

Strategic Planning Service

Every business needs to understand what success looks like and the roadmap for getting there. This process is efficient and thorough and uses a proven set of tools to create a plan that the Board, Management and other stakeholders are confident in.

---

When to take a risk assessment

There are four simple (but profound) questions to ask yourself when assessing risk. Learn what they are and have the courage to use them when managing your team.

Read more >>

Being out of scope is risky

Is it too risky to be cooperative to get the project moving along even though some elements are out of scope? What is the best answer when common sense is battling it out in your project with scope creep? These are matters we all wrestle with. Come on over to the blog and read my recommendations on how to handle these situations.

Read more >>

